- ↑ Conversational strategies to drive stigma reduction
- ↑ The knowledge to identify warning signs and symptoms of mental health challenges
- ↑ Strategies to help colleagues, friends or family who may be at risk or struggling
- ↑ Effective strategies to help themselves including coping, resilience and stress management
- ↑ Information on when and where to get professional help

Did you know that almost 50% of Australians will experience mental health struggles?

HELPING TEAMS

Better for one, Better for all.

Mental health education has been shown to have an increase in business productivity and profitability; improved staff health, morale and wellbeing; greater staff engagement and lower staff turnovers; as well as contributing to a better, more positive world. What are you waiting for?

What they're saying

The program had a huge impact to general morale and reinforced the importance of self-care to all of our team... By extension, it also made an impact on their families, particularly those with teenagers. Really useful information to help parents go home and start a conversation with their own children."

HELP US HAVE MORE CONVERSATIONS

For many children in Australia, there is no relationship with mental health. Our 45-minute conversation with each young person is life-changing and potentially life saving.

If there is one message
we want people to keep,
it's #itaintweaktospeak.

When we are kids, we are told to slip, slop, and slap when it comes to sun protection. We want that same reaction when we talk about mental health. If you're struggling with your mental health or having negative thoughts, protect yourself and reach out for help, because
